Are We Truly Ready To Pivot To Transport-Oriented Development?

1. What are the key challenges and potential barriers to successfully implementing medium-density development near Sydney's transport hubs, particularly in terms of community opposition and heritage preservation?
2. How can urban planners and policymakers balance the need for increased density with the preservation of Sydney's unique suburban character and heritage?
3. What strategies can be employed to gain public support for transport-oriented development, and how can concerns about overdevelopment and loss of local identity be addressed?
4. What lessons can Sydney learn from other global cities that have successfully adopted transport-oriented development, and how can these be applied to the local context?

At the end of this panel, attendees will be able to:

- Outline the key points involved in the NSW Government's approach to increasing housing density in Sydney
- Identify the strengths associated with this strategy
- Identify the weaknesses associated with this strategy
- Outline alternatives to the NSW Government's housing density strategy
